The Protestant Movement

The Protestant Movement began as an act of Reformation.

- By the 1500's most of the Western Europe was controlled by Church of Rome and Eastern Europe was controlled by Church of Constantinople.
- A division developed regarding ecclesiastical practices by a growing movement of Protestants— or those who protest.
- The Reformation began with Martin Luther in Germany who challenged the Roman Church and its practices of selling “indulgences” for the remission of sins. He believed the church did not save humankind from sin, but rather faith in Christ saves humans from sin.
- His followers were called Lutherans; numerous sects began forming, all breaking away from the Roman Church.

The Protestant Movement

- It can become rather confusing; in Germany alone, the country was divided, with some kingdoms remaining Catholic, and others becoming Protestant. The rulers in each kingdom expected the people to follow the individual king's chosen faith.
- A second leader emerged on the scene who will have major influences on the future emerging American landscape: John Calvin.
- His followers were called Calvinists.
- In his work Institutes of the Christian Religion general themes are proposed which form the predestination concept:
 - > God is all powerful.
 - > Humankind is weak, stained with original sin.
 - > Humankind alone cannot save their souls.
 - > God knows in advance who is saved and who is damned.

The Protestant Movement

- Those elected to be saved must give evidence of their future glory while they are in the material world.
- Protestant groups of the period are:
 - France- Huguenots
 - Scotland- Presbyterians (lead by John Knox)
 - England- Puritans
- The Church of England strengthened under Elizabeth I leadership.
- The divide between Anglicans and Puritans developed due to the fact Puritans wanted to follow a Calvinistic ideology.
- Western Europe from this point divided itself along either Roman Catholicism or one of the sects of Protestantism

The Protestant Movement

Ultimately, this affected colonization of America in particular due to:

- any religious group opposed to a state-controlled religion could propose relocating to the New World as a means to worship as they saw fit
- Protestantism encouraged business enterprise through a value system upholding a strong work ethic
- Protestantism did not view interest loans (money lending) as a sin; Roman Catholicism at this time did view money lending as a sin
- Overseas trading companies took advantage of the circumstance in order to help found colonies
- A cold war mentality ensued—a race to populate the New World with Catholics or predominantly with Protestants
